We witnessed the operation known as infiltration, on Saturday last, at the nesses the operation. It is the invention of Dr. Morgan, Professor of Anatomy in the Royal College of Surgeons Position. in Ireland.

The process briefly is this: The blood is all thoroughly removed from the animal, and in its place is infiltrated the preserving liquor-ordinary brine or pickle, to which other ingredients may be added to suit the taste.

Two small tanks (or barrels will answer) are placed at an elevation of a blow on the head-so as not to injure the heart, from which the blood rushes. When the bleeding slackens a pipe attached to an inch hose, leading from the left side of the heart and the water disease of the kidneys, which took, turned on. It follows the course of however, no serious form until the the blood vessels through every part latter part of December, 1865, continuof the animal, gushing out at the incision in the opposite side of the heart the months of January, February, and in a bloody stream at first, but rapidly growing clearer and clearer until every particle of blood is removed and the pure clear water flows out, having made the complete circuit of the blood

Then the hose is changed, the orifice in the right side of the heart is closed with a small clamp, and the brine is utes every part of the animal where there had been blood is thoroughly rapid and cheap, and the meat being preserved with all its nutritive properties fresh and sweet for almost any length of time.
